

COMPLIANCE DETERMINATION

Suicide Aggregate- Recommendation 3

Recommendation Summary: Train government workers on trauma and its effects.

Primary Public Body: Manitoba Health and Seniors Care

1. Operating from a child's rights perspective, develop a curriculum for education and training concerning early childhood trauma and its effects that includes provincially relevant information, such as the history of colonization and its impact on Indigenous Peoples

Many trainings on trauma were discussed but did not demonstrate a focus on early childhood trauma (0-6 age range), nor was there a demonstration that the trainings operate from a child's rights perspective.

Outstanding Action: Curriculum on early childhood trauma.

2. Develop a sustainable strategy by which to deliver, evaluate, and revise the curriculum as required based on impact evaluations

No evidence of a sustainable strategy to deliver, evaluate, and revise curriculum based on impact evaluations was provided. Therefore, this intent remains incomplete.

Outstanding Action: Develop a sustainable strategy to deliver, evaluate, and revise curriculum based on impact evaluations.

COMPLIANCE DETERMINATION

Actions taken only implement a small part of the recommendation. Further work is needed to develop specific training on early childhood trauma and a sustainable strategy to deliver, evaluate, and revise curriculum on early childhood trauma.

Recommendation Compliance Summary

This form details the assessment of compliance with recommendations made under Section 27 and Section 31 of The Advocate for Children and Youth Act. MACY assesses recommendations for compliance once a year but receives updates from the public bodies every six months.

Intent 1: Operating from a child’s rights perspective, develop a curriculum for education and training concerning early childhood trauma and its effects that includes provincially relevant information, such as the history of colonization and its impact on Indigenous Peoples.

- Manitoba Families reported that a significant amount of training exists on early childhood trauma which is called different names across different settings and professions, including ACEs and trauma-focused. Furthermore, Manitoba Families noted that the recommendation, as made by the Manitoba Advocate for Children and Youth, does not specify a need for a single trauma training. Thus, the Departments of Justice, Education, and Families reported separate trainings concerning early childhood trauma and its effects.
- Additionally, Manitoba Families has contended that employees identified as service providers include a group for whom post-secondary education in areas like social work is a requirement and thus already addresses trauma training at a higher level than an introductory course, like the one that this recommendation asks for, could provide. There was no evidence submitted to indicate that all service providers across all government departments delivering services to children and youth have received training on trauma in post-secondary institutions or whether there is specific trauma training provided. If service providers have received this training in post-secondary institutions, it remains unknown what is available to those service providers who do not have a post-secondary degree.
- The Department of Justice’s The Road to Mental Readiness initiative is a mental health resilience training program for staff. The training supports staff in youth corrections facilities by promoting mental health resilience and offers a greater understanding of mental health challenges, including trauma. Manitoba Families noted that staff in positions such as probations would have received training in their qualifications prior to hiring through post-secondary degrees (e.g., social work). In order to meet the intent of this recommendation, information is needed to demonstrate how The Road to Mental Readiness training operates from a child’s rights perspective and how the training specifically focuses on developing knowledge about adverse childhood experiences for employees and in the youth served.
- Manitoba Education highlights that it shares information about professional development opportunities, including trauma-informed support, with school divisions. Manitoba Education explained it does not develop its own training because school divisions are responsible for training professionals. For this reason, Manitoba Education does not keep track of the trainings that professionals working in the education system have taken.
- Manitoba Families highlighted multiple activities, including:
 - Manitoba Families announced a $30,000 funding allocation to Manitoba Association of Women’s Shelters to develop specialized online training for front line shelter staff on trauma-informed mental health, which will better support women and children who have experienced trauma. There was no evidence provided as to how this training operates from a child’s rights perspective or centres knowledge about ACEs.
 - Trauma and Resilience Training was designed and developed by the Department Training Unit in 2017. The training is a free one-day session that aims to support staff with appropriate and effective ways to help clients struggling with the effects of trauma and to implement trauma- and resilience-informed approaches. Manitoba Families reported that in the fall of 2019, the training was made mandatory for some branches in the Employment Insurance Assistance program. As of May 19, 2021, 568 employees had received this training. Staff trained in the Trauma and Resilience training work in program areas such as Early Learning and Child Care, Employment and Income Assistance, Child and Family Services, Community Living DisAbility Services, Children's DisAbility Services (CdS), Rural and Northern Services, and MB Housing.

- Although 568 staff are reported to have taken this training, only 62 staff took the training in the 2020-21 fiscal year.
- Even though the training is mandatory for some branches in the Employment Insurance Assistance program, it is hard to understand why more program areas like Early Learning and Child Care, CdS, or Child and Family Services have not made this training mandatory given that their employees work more directly with children and families.
- Working with Refugees Training is centred on the issue of trauma in a two-day training. The training is free to staff and, to date, 274 staff have completed the training.
- Manitoba Families converted the Trauma and Resilience and Working with Refugees training to a virtual platform due to the COVID-19 pandemic and anticipates being able to train a greater number of staff in the coming months.
- Path to Reconciliation is a training provided to all provincial employees through the Civil Service Commission's Organization and Staff Development (OSD). The training addresses the Truth and Reconciliation Call to Action 7 to provide education on colonization in Canada, including intergenerational trauma and its effects on Indigenous Peoples. The OSD introduced the training in December 2019 via a classroom format and was able to deliver three offerings before shifting to a virtual platform in November 2020 for six offerings. A total of 186 provincial employees have completed the course to date.
- Manitoba Families provided additional information which details that Manitoba has purchased open access for all Manitoban-residents to the Science of Early Childhood Development (SECD) living textbook (<https://www.scienceofecd.com/>). The Department's training unit partnered with Red River College and the four Authorities to create an in-person workshop offered to foster parents, respite workers, and others who provide direct care to young children within the child welfare sector. The training is provided by the Red River College and is operating as a pilot. It includes the impacts of trauma on young children. The open-sourcing of the SECD living textbook is encouraging, as it allows access to all Manitoban residents. Furthermore, the in-person training based on the SECD materials is also promising.
- While the trainings described by Manitoba Justice and Families are intended to address trauma, the recommendation specifically focuses on early childhood trauma, which refers to traumatic experiences that occur to children ages 0-6. The information provided by the various domains does not demonstrate that early childhood trauma for the 0-6 age range is specifically addressed in the trainings described. Furthermore, of the trainings described by the domains, evidence is needed to demonstrate how they operate from a children's rights perspective. This recommendation calls for a curriculum on early childhood trauma. While the trainings discussed may be a part of that curriculum, there is still an outstanding action to develop training specifically on early childhood trauma. The development of training targeted to those providing direct care to young children within the child welfare sector is equally as encouraging, but it remains unclear how or if anyone who works with children outside of the child welfare domain are able to access this training.

Intent 2: Develop a sustainable strategy by which to deliver, evaluate, and revise the curriculum as required based on impact evaluations.

- Manitoba Families communicated that there are numerous trainings in some sectors, for which evidence has been provided. Despite previous trainings provided in some sectors, there was no evidence submitted regarding a sustainable strategy to deliver, evaluate, and revise the curriculum based on impact evaluations.
- Therefore, this intent remains incomplete. In order for the Department of Families to demonstrate progress on this intent of the recommendation, evidence of a strategy across the whole-of-government regarding early childhood trauma must be shared. Although each government department may have distinct needs and applicability pertaining to early childhood trauma, an overall strategy that outlines ongoing quality improvement is needed to demonstrate progress and compliance on this recommendation.

Analysis Summary: In light of the trainings reported, this recommendation is deemed limitedly compliant. Further work is needed to develop specific training on early childhood trauma and a sustainable strategy to deliver, evaluate, and revise curriculum on early childhood trauma.
